Zapakujte si základní informace ke zkoušce:

- Test obsahuje 60 úloh.
- Je rozdělen do 3 oddílů, na řešení 1. máte 22 minut (délka nahrávky), na každý další 20 minut.
- Pracujte vždy jen na příslušném oddílu, časy nejsou převoditelné.
- U každé úlohy s výběrem možností je jen jedna správná odpověď.
- Za každou správnou odpověď získáte bod, za špatnou odpověď část bodu ztrácíte.
- Nejlepší je řešit nejdříve snadné úlohy a k náročnějším se vrátit.
- Nebuďte nervózní z toho, že nevyřešíte všechno, to se povede málokomu.

Read the following text and solve the tasks based solely on the information in it.

QUESTIONS 13–20

You are going to read extracts from four book reviews. For each of the questions below, choose from the books A–D. Each book may be chosen more than once.

A – Nothing But Grass by Will Cohu

This is a sprawling, generous book with no central characters; instead, a large cast of individuals and families arrive and depart over 30 years. Parts of it feel like short stories in their own right, knitted sometimes closely, sometimes loosely to each other rather than tasked with contributing to any central, propulsive narrative.

There are shortcomings, of course. Cohu’s male characters are far stronger and more powerful than his female ones, and as the narrative approaches the present day, he throws too much at it – the Iraq war, flooding, the financial crash. In fact, the book would be tighter if it lost a quarter of its length. But the need to know how all of this fits together is enough to hold the attention. The result is an accomplished and memorable rural novel.

B – Get in Trouble by Kelly Link

One distinctive aspect of Link’s stories is that although fantastical events do occur, they occur in a world like ours where people consume fantasy culture. There is a danger with a collection like Get in Trouble that the reader is primed for the weird: nothing is as easily expected as the unexpected. Link manages to steer clear of this in various ways: a story such as “The Lesson” keeps hinting that something uncanny will happen, but foregrounds the lives of a gay couple and the premature birth of their surrogate child while they attend a friend’s island wedding. The details of the dangers facing a child born at 24 weeks are infinitely more frightening than the occult motifs incorporated into the story.

C – The Great Explosion by Brian Dillon

In this personal diary made public, the author describes his travels around the marshlands of north Kent. He finds his primary theme near the site of a horrifying explosion that happened at Uplees on the marshes on 2 April 1916. Two local plants were then working under enormous pressure to produce munitions demanded by the First World War.

Dillon traces the explosion as it resounds in different domains and contexts. He sketches the history of bombs, and tells of the rise and interwar fall of the explosives industry in north Kent. Although this book is a brilliant evocation of place grasped in its modernity, Dillon ends with a romantic salute to nature. He has finally discovered the water-filled crater of the Great Explosion at Uplees and is back on his bike, heading home through the evening towards Canterbury.

D – The Dust That Falls from Dreams by Louis de Bernières

The crime writer PD James, who was born in 1920, once attributed her choice of a genre drenched in death to having grown up a bike, heading home through the evening towards Canterbury.

Although its biggest concerns are love and death, the novel also deeply explores religion – Rosie is an Anglican with Catholic leanings, while another key figure is a priest who has served in the army – and class and gender politics of the time: the McCosh daughters and their servants variously benefit from new professional and personal freedoms for women in a society where the absence of men is felt at almost every kitchen table and office desk.

QUESTIONS 21–26

Chimps have mental skills to cook

They are not likely to start barbecuing in the rainforest, but chimpanzees can understand the concept of cooking and are willing to postpone eating raw food, even to carry food some distance to cook it rather than eat immediately, scientists reported on Tuesday.

The findings, based on nine experiments conducted in the Republic of Congo, suggest that chimps have all the brainpower needed to cook, including planning and causal understanding. They do, however, lack the ability to produce fire. But if they are given a source of heat, chimps “are quite able to manipulate it to cook,” said developmental psychologist Felix Warnkeken of Harvard University, who conducted the study with Alexandra Rosati.

The findings lend support to the idea that cooking accelerated human evolution. Cooked food is easier to digest, spurring the growth of large brains in our australopithecine ancestors, Harvard’s Richard Wrangham proposed about a decade ago. If chimps have the skills to cook, australopithecines likely did have them too, said Wrangham, who was not involved in the study. Archaeological evidence suggests humans began using fire 1 million years ago.

Some of the experiments confirmed findings from studies by other scientists, such as that chimps prefer seared sweet potatoes to raw. But those studies did not test whether chimps have the mental skills to cook. Other studies did. For instance, scientists presented a group of chimps with two containers. One yielded cooked food through a false bottom, not actually cooking, and one did not. The chimps learned that one of them transformed potatoes from raw to cooked. Given a choice of which device to put food in, they almost always opted for the “cooker,” showing they understood and willingly waited for the raw-to-cooked transformation. Chimps did not put pieces of wood that scientists gave them into the cooker, suggesting they grasped that only food can be cooked. Surprisingly, even though chimps usually eat food immediately, they were often willing to walk across a room to cook. When the first one in the group did this, the scientists wondered if they had a single “chimpanzee genius”. But other group members quickly showed the same ability, understanding the idea of cooking. There was no evidence, however, that they understood the concept of tipping.

21. It was reported that chimpanzees ______.
(A) can comprehend what cooking is
(B) enjoy sharing their food with others
(C) prefer eating raw food over cooked food
(D) sometimes barbecue in the rainforest

22. Chimpanzees are incapable of ______.
(A) causal understanding
(B) making fire
(C) manipulating sources of heat
(D) obtaining cooked food

23. Felix Warnkeken ______.
(A) conducted research under Richard Wrangham’s supervision
(B) examined the evolution of australopithecines
(C) performed a study on chimpanzees with somebody else
(D) taught chimpanzees how to cook

24. The two boxes presented to chimpanzees during scientific experiments ______.
(A) contained cookers
(B) had pieces of wood inside
(C) scared the chimpanzees
(D) were different

25. When presented with pieces of wood, the chimpanzees taking part in the experiment ______.
(A) attempted to set them on fire
(B) never inserted them into the “cooker”
(C) tried to eat them immediately
(D) waited for them to be transformed into food

26. Chimpanzees typically eat their food ______.
(A) as soon as they obtain it
(B) broken up into smaller pieces
(C) only when no “chimpanzee genius” is around
(D) together with their offspring

QUESTIONS 33–38

Vitamin A pills could save thousands of children

Giving vitamin A supplements to children under the age of five in developing countries could save 600,000 lives a year, researchers claim. UK and Pakistani experts assessed 43 studies involving 200,000 children, and found deaths were \(\frac{24}{100}\) lower if children were given the vitamin. They say taking it would also cut rates \(\frac{measles}{100}\) and diarrhoea.

That’s why researchers that carried \(\text{(35)}\) this study say that until other sources are available, supplements should be given to all children at risk. They claim that there is no doubt vitamin A supplements may prevent many young children \(\text{(36)}\) dying.

The body needs vitamin A for the visual and immune systems \(\frac{properly}{100}\). The World Health Organization (WHO) estimates that, around the world, 190 million children under the age of five may have a vitamin A deficiency. But despite widespread efforts, supplementation programmes do not reach all the children \(\text{(38)}\) could benefit.

QUESTIONS 39–44

Can We Curb Student Cheating?

The science students were working diligently on a tough test about the human circulatory system. As they worked, the teacher \(\text{(39)}\) suspicious of one student who repeatedly examined her hands. Sure enough, when he checked the student’s hands, he found a diagram of the heart inked on her palm. The teacher called her parents and told them what \(\frac{\text{(40)}}{\text{happened}}\). “My daughter only wrote the answers on her hands to study for the test,” the father responded, “and, anyway, I think you’re making too big a deal out of this.” The teacher was \(\frac{\text{(41)}}{\text{feeling frustrated and angry}}\) that the student would probably learn very \(\frac{\text{(42)}}{\text{from the experience}}\). Yet the situation described by the teacher in the above scenario is not unusual, \(\frac{\text{(43)}}{\text{is the reaction of the parents}}\).

Many trend watchers think cheating is epidemic, usually beginning in middle school and extending through college. A 1998 national report showed four of five top students admitted cheating at some point. Unfortunately, no foolproof approach to preventing cheating exists. However, teachers should try to create an environment in which cheating is \(\frac{\text{(44)}}{\text{and they should ensure its negative consequences}}\).
